Declaration

‘Except where I have indicated, the thesis I am submitting is entirely my own work and has not been submitted for assessment at any other University.’

20.01.2004

2004 © Rolf I. Vaernes

All rights reserved. No part of this thesis may be reprinted or reproduced or utilized in any form or by any electronic, mechanical, or other means, now known or hereafter invented, including photocopying and recording, or in any information storage or retrieval system without permission in writing from the author.
Abstract

Rolf I. Vaernes, The Poetics of Being

The aim of The Poetics of Being is to inquire into how the apperception of the Being of beings is produced. We will recognize this production not primarily in philosophy, but in a medium accessible to us all, theatre. Although the Romantic tradition of literary criticism from Herder to Bloom has noted that Shakespeare produces an exceptional sense of what is [true], so much so that he is said to create the impression of nature or life, no one has so far attempted to show how precisely Shakespeare affects this experience. Contrary to T. S. Eliot, who is unable to discern any kind of poetics in Shakespeare’s plays, we have discovered an insistent and consistent pattern of inadequation, a kind of mismatch. The thesis argues, that the predominant tropes of inadequation are falsity, dissimilarity, nothing, indefiniteness, elision and substitution. We shall show that these figures of inadequation are the universal means by which Shakespeare, almost imperceptibly, compels the spectator to infer the apperception of what is [true].

On the basis of these tropes of inadequation the thesis makes the fundamental philosophical claim that the cognition of Being through non-Being is a negative form of what Heidegger calls the ontological difference. We call this the negative ontological difference. The thesis demonstrates that with the exception of some Pre-Socratic thinkers, Plato in the Sophist, the work of Pseudo-Dionysius, and the writings of Derrida, the bulk of the tradition of Western philosophy has argued Being in terms of positivities. While the thesis does not question the possibility of realizing the ontological difference in a positive fashion, as does Heidegger’s philosophy of unconcealment, the thesis claims that the negative ontological difference, or ontological contradiction, is the more forceful process by which we become aware of what is [true].
Acknowledgments

I would like to thank Princess Mirah for love, encouragements and support, but even more, for like a goddess indicating the true direction for this thesis, for sharing an experience of life without which this thesis would not be possible. I would also like to thank her for sharing her family at the Palace in Karangasem, Bali. My thanks extend to her family, who through their care provided me with what is invaluable to all fundamental research: time. Horst Ruthrof has been an invaluable mentor from the beginning to the end, and I would like to praise him for systematically, forcefully and knowledgeably, guiding me to the completion of this thesis, so effortlessly and cleverly that I at times may have had the false impression that I could have done so without him. Through his kind advice and learned company, I have for the first time in my academic life realized an intention, which would have been impossible if he had not from the beginning known where I was heading better than myself. I am also grateful that he has convinced me that there is even more to learn from people than from books, for he taught me the basic tenet of his own philosophy without saying a word. Furthermore, I would like to express thanks the administration at Murdoch University for guiding me from beginning to end through all bureaucratic hurdles, but especially to director of research Paul D'Sylva for having introduced me to the University itself. I would finally like to thank my parents in Norway for being there when this project was first conceived years ago, and my students for always reminding me that if you don’t make yourself understood there is hardly any reason to speak at all. To Carl Burman I wish to extend my gratitude for showing me that there is always a way if you are more than willing to talk the talk, that is, walk the walk. And perhaps all those I have mentioned are among those Heidegger had in mind when he said, ‘Only those who walk along, know there’s a way.’ For showing me that, I am eternally thankful.
Rolf I. Vaernes

The Poetics of Being

Murdoch University
Abstract

Acknowledgements

C0 INTRODUCTION

C1 THE HERMENEUTICS OF BEING

§1.1 Making the Shakespearean Aporia
§1.2 Unmaking the Shakespearean Aporia
§1.3 The Topology of Being

C2 PHILOSOPHIES OF UNCONCEALMENT

§2.1 Plato’s Khora
§2.2 Aristotle’s Place
§2.3 Plotinus’ Mirror
§2.4 Nietzsche’s Chaos
§2.5 Derrida’s Khora

C3 PHILOSOPHIES OF CONCEALMENT

§3.1 Derrida’s Death
§3.2 Kant’s ‘Paralogisms of Pure Reason’
§3.3 Dionysius’ Mystical Theology

C4 THE TECHNE OF BEING

§4.1 The Inadequacy of Mimesis
§4.2 The Techne of Inadequation
§4.3 Instruments of Inadequation

C5 THE TRUE PRODUCTION OF BEING

§5.1 The Battle for Truth
§5.2 The Body of Truth
§5.3 Shakespeare’s True Betrayal
To Princess Mirah, for showing that love is the self-sacrificial desire to unconceal what is true and false, the Being of beings.