The pastoral academic divide: Impacts and implications for pastoral care

Katherine E. Clark (B.Sc. Hons.)

This thesis is presented for the degree of Master of Education (by Research) of Murdoch University, Perth, Western Australia. April, 2008
I declare that this thesis is my own account of my research and contains as its main content work which has not previously been submitted for a degree at any tertiary education institution.

........................................

Katherine E. Clark
Abstract

Secondary schools in Australia routinely develop organisational constructs to fulfil their dual obligations of academic teaching and the pastoral care of students. Although these obligations are closely interrelated, school organisational structures are frequently dichotomous, differentiating between the academic roles of teachers and their pastoral responsibilities and can result in a functional divide between the two sides of the school. Teachers find themselves wearing ‘two hats’; a subject teacher and a pastoral carer and thus are required to work in two separate domains, the academic and the pastoral, each with distinct and different tasks, expectations and line management. The limited amounts of research available suggest that such an organisational divide can hinder the work of teachers and lead to some organisational confusion within the school. This research took the form of a qualitative case study, based in an independent secondary school in Western Australia. It investigated the impacts and implications of the notional division between the pastoral and academic dimensions of the school. The thesis begins with a review of the understanding and development of pastoral care in schools. The construct of an enabling bureaucracy is then explored and adopted as a theoretical lens with which to examine the pastoral care system from the perspective of teachers, students and senior managers. Narratives are used to present the data. The research findings indicate that alignment of the pastoral and academic structures, both functionally and culturally, can be achieved if an enabling approach is employed. Such alignment allows the pastoral care system to support the primary function of a school which is learning, whilst retaining its fundamental duty of student care. The study concludes with a consideration of how an enabling school culture may improve the provision of pastoral care in schools.
Contents

Chapter 1 Introduction
Thesis structure 2
A personal perspective 3
Significance of the study 6
The school 10

Chapter 2 The Wider Context
A review of the literature 12
A definition of terms 13
An historical perspective 19
Structural arrangements in schools 24
The ‘Pastoral Academic Divide’ 25
Current trends 28
A conceptual framework: Enabling bureaucracy and pastoral care 32

Chapter 3 The Research Approach
Methodology 37
Self researcher 39
The research questions and conceptual framework 41
Methods, techniques and procedures 42
Data credibility 45
Ethical considerations 46
Data analysis 47
List of Tables

Table 1  Characteristics of enabling and hindering structures 55
Table 2  Summary of student data 66
Acknowledgements

I would like to extend my sincere thanks to the following people who have assisted me in this research:

My supervisors, Associate Professor Helen Wildy and Dr. Laura Perry, for their encouragement, wisdom, patience and advice;

Dr. Carol Hogan, for her continual support;

The Principal, teachers and students of the research school;

Mrs Ros Trichet, for her technical assistance.